Strategies to avoid errors with Look Alike Sound Alike Medications

1. PROCUREMENT

Limit the medication strengths available in the formulary of each healthcare facility.

Avoid frequent changes of brand or colour. Notify the end users whenever there are changes.

Whenever possible, avoid purchase of medicines with similar packaging and appearance. As new products or packages are introduced, compare them with existing packaging.

Strategies to avoid errors with Look Alike Sound Alike Medications

2. STORAGE

Use Tall Man lettering to emphasize differences in medication name e.g: cefOTAXime and cefTAZIDime.

Use additional warning labels for look-alike medicines. Warning labels should be uniform throughout the respective facility to facilitate identification.

For sound-alike medications where Tall Man lettering is not applicable, proprietary (brand or trademarked) names may be added to distinguish between the medications. The non-proprietary names should be in larger font size than the brand names.

Store LASA medications separately from their LASA pair. Whenever possible, avoid storing the products in immediate proximity to one another.

Strategies to avoid errors with Look Alike Sound Alike Medications

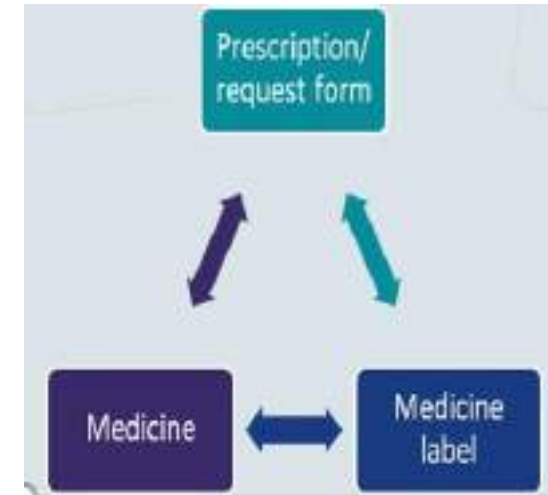

3. DISPENSING

Identify medicines based on its name and strength and not by its appearance or location.

Check the appropriateness of dose for the medicines dispensed.

Read medication labels carefully at all dispensing stages and perform triangle check. Triangle check is to check actual medicines against the medicines' labels and against the prescription.

Double checking should be conducted during the dispensing and supply process.
